

ABSTRACT

A delivery member is detachably secured to a discharge port of a syringe. The delivery member is provided with a fluted, open-ended distal portion having a cross-sectional area which is substantially greater than that of the discharge port. When the open end of the fluted portion is pressed against tissue and liquid medication or nutrient, or gas, is supplied under pressure to the delivery member from the syringe, the liquid is perfused into the tissue